

Sophie Dexter Desk Top Sources Background

Desk top sources means finding out ~~the~~ about where you are going by looking at:

photographs

and Books and Maps.

Site Photographs

In photographs you can look at: Vegetation Colour, (grass colour) and boundaries, (walls) and earthworks (humps and bumps) and collapsed walls.

Aerial Photographs

Aerial Photographs help you to find Earthworks because you can see the whole area and you can see the shadows

Cultivation Terraces

Some Earthworks make enclosures. They are called cultivation terraces and they were used as gardens, yards and animal pens.

Maps

Old maps are useful ^{for archeology} because they tell you what the area used to be like. ^(Dates of Maps) OS 1853 6 Maps, 1793 Enclosure Award. They show old buildings

Sophie Devlin

If you compare old and new maps you can see what has changed. Changes create clues.

Site works

Site works are also called previous archeology. It means what ~~has~~ has happened in the area before you got there.
